About Chongqing

-Background

Chongqing is one of four municipalities directly under the central government. Located at the confluence of the Yangtze and Jialing Rivers, it is also an industrial city with an active port. Chongqing has lots of picturesque scenery since there are so many mountains. With the improved economy, and so many scenic spots, Chongqing has become an important tourist destination. There have been many ancient poems written about her natural beauty.

Lying in a subtropical monsoon climate zone, Chongqing is warm in winter and hot in summer. It is famous as a "foggy city", with ten more foggy days per annum than London. The best time to come to Chongqing is between March and June, or from September to November.

Quite different from flourishing Shanghai and traditional Beijing, Chongqing has its own character. Life here is slower and more leisurely. Every day, many people can be seen drinking tea with friends along the riverbank, or playing Mahjong. Strangely, many people who live in this city have hot tempers, and a straight forward, open character. While they often speak loudly, they are very warm-hearted and are always happy to help others. The character of the locals probably has something to do with the spicy Chongqing food. From hotpot to snacks, it can be said that Chongqing people cannot eat a meal without chili.

Chongqing is a big international city, with more and more foreign companies setting up here. Life in Chongqing is very convenient, as you can buy everything you need, and you go anywhere you want by subway, bus or taxi. At night you can enjoy the amazing nightlife, with bars, street barbecues and snack markets busy until dawn.

-Climate and Topography

Chongqing is warm in winter and hot in summer and is regarded as one of three famous "Furnace" cities along the Yangtze River with maximum temperatures reaching as high as 43°C. However, lying in a subtropical monsoon climate zone, Chongqing is still a good place to live with its year-round average temperature 18°C. Rainfall in Chongqing is ample but mal-distributed. It rains heavily at nights during spring and summer but becomes overcast with showers during fall. In winter, foggy days come frequently and limit sunshine, making Chongqing one of those famous "foggy cities".

Chongqing could also be called "City of Rivers" for at least six rivers run through the city. As a consequence, Chongqing has lots of riverside roads which are ideal for leisure and dining. When darkness falls, lights stretch along the rivers for kilometers making for fabulous night views.

The confluence of the Yangtze and Jiangling Rivers is called Chaotianmen

Harbor where you can see these two different colored rivers join together. The world's greatest water control project, the Three Gorges Dam, is located downstream.

Chongqing is also a "mountain city" with as much as 70% of the city built on the slopes surrounding the river junction creating very unique living conditions. For instance, one Chongqing's light rail lines passes through buildings and much of the system is underground like a subway. Roads are often narrow, steep and very windy with one or two 360° and more looping up the steep slopes of Nanshan.

Because Chongqing is built on the hillsides, many buildings can be entered from multiple floors other than the ground floors. And many apartments boast views of eye-level passing traffic on flyovers and skyways all over the city.

-Chongqing people

Chongqing people are tough, building tunnels through the mountains, constructing bridges and sophisticated overpasses. They contend with the mountains and rivers as well as live on them. Because of the extremely hot summers and cold, wet winters, they invented hot pot, love chili and now they can not live without them. Chongqing people are very proud of their food and it is hard for them to embrace food from other places.

-Public Transport

Chongqing's public transport system of metro, buses and taxis make it easy to get around.

-Chongqing& Sichuan food

Since Chongqing was originally part of Sichuan, most of the cuisine is Sichuan style and which is hot and spicy. Important ingredients in Sichuan cuisine are chilies, Sichuan pepper, garlic, ginger, and fermented soybean.
